I am disturbed by the introduction of #defines like `current_vps()` and `vps_utsname`.

Magic lower case #defines are usually a bad idea.

These defines hide the cost of the operations you are performing.
At that point you might as well name the thing `system_utsname` so you don't have to change the code.

And of course you failed to change several references to `system_utsname`.
