

---

Subject: Re: forcibly purging quota?

Posted by dev on Tue, 18 Sep 2007 09:15:40 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

Can you please explain a bit how your quotas get wrong?

Do you have some test case to reproduce the problem and demonstrate it?

Or you have started VEs w/o quotas from time to time?

Or you have some private custom VE private directories?

What filesystem do you use for /vz?

Thanks,

Kirill

Gregor Mosheh wrote:

> Hey, guys.

> Thanks again for OpenVZ, and for the expert assistance. :)

>

> I have 15 VEs, and the quota is totally wrong on all of them. I have used > the trick of "vzctl stop;vzquota drop;vzctl start" in order to restart a

> VE and have the quota properly updated.

>

> But... I would like to avoid shutting down our customers' VPSs.

>

> Question: How safe is "vzquota drop -f"? Could I use it to forcibly and > safely have the quota refreshed, without shutting down each VE? What > risks (if any) are involved?

>   vzquota drop 1 -f

>   vzquota on 1 -f

>

---