Subject: Re: [PATCH] Move kasprintf.o to obj-y Posted by akpm on Mon, 24 Sep 2007 08:21:17 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

On Mon, 24 Sep 2007 09:09:48 +0100 Christoph Hellwig <hch@infradead.org> wrote:

- > On Mon, Sep 24, 2007 at 09:59:49AM +0200, Sam Ravnborg wrote:
- >>> Please kill lib-y while you're at it. It's useless and a constant
- >> source of pain like this.
- > > Kernel-bloat is another "constant source of pain".
- >> But the troubles are that increased blot does not result in compiler erros.

> >

> > And your proposal to kil lib-y is a counter-act here.

>

- > Killing lib-y doesn't create kernel bloat if done right. Just introduce
- > proper Kconfig dependencies for the truely optional parts. But if you
- > look at the list of objects in lib-y you'll see that they fall in basically
- > three categories:

>

- > (1) always used by core code should be obj-y
- > (2) generic implementation for arch-specific functionality, should be
- guarded by Kconfig for clarity reasons anyway
- (3) library code often but not always used by code that's not always
- > built in. Here we run into the move to obj-y to avoid compiler
- > warning when used as module issue all the time. Adding a CONFIG
- > for the bigger onces actually avoids bloat over obj-y here, and
- > when it's small enough obj-y is a lot safer in the presence of
- > modular users

>

- > Really, trying to use the old static library use on demand concept simply
- > doesn't fit the way the kernel is built with it's modules and dependencies.

yup, it duplicates what the config system does and is a common source of problems.