
Subject: RE: Catching the console

Posted by Dietmar Maurer on Thu, 13 Dec 2007 08:25:19 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Hi all,

here is a patch for vzctl to catch init output. output is written to VEROOT/var/log/init.log

I tested it with some debian templates (sysvinit), but it would be great if someone else tries/test it with other templates.

- Dietmar

> Von: devel-bounces@openvz.org

> [mailto:devel-bounces@openvz.org] Im Auftrag von Roman Kagan

> Gesendet: Donnerstag, 13. Dezember 2007 09:16

> An: Enrico Weigelt

> Cc: OpenVZ developer list

> Betreff: Re: [Devel] Catching the console

>

> On Wed, Dec 12, 2007 at 12:27:01PM +0100, Enrico Weigelt wrote:

> > No I'd like to request an feature for catching the console.

> > IMHO, it's enough to have an option to vzctl start, which > tells it to > > not to detach and bring the VE's console to the current tty.

>

> Unfortunately this is much trickier than that. The problem > is that at some point you'll want to detach the VE0's end;

> with standard Unix98 ptys this will result in SIGHUP being > sent to all processes in the VE whose controlling terminal is > the console. Besides, there are certain implications for > online migration of the VEs - you should leave no references > to the VE0 objects that can't be reconstructed on the > destination node.

>

> So it looks like there's no pure userspace solution. OTOH > adding the kernel support for it doesn't look impossible > off-hand; I'll have a look.

>

> Roman.

>

File Attachments

1) env.c.diff, downloaded 325 times
