Xemul, thanks for your explanation! It is more clear for me now on the usage of inodes. I's like to try your suggestion to set the inodes unlimited and monitor the usage and then see about locking it to that... I would appreciate if you can share how to set inode to the unlimited way. And, what commands can I use to track the inodes usage? Sorry, for the dumb question as I am not that experience in linux - Yet!

Joe
