
Subject: Re: [ckrm-tech] [RFC] [PATCH 00/12] CKRM after a major overhaul
Posted by KUROSAWA Takahiro on Mon, 24 Apr 2006 07:12:46 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

On Mon, 24 Apr 2006 10:45:59 +0400
Kirill Korotaev <dev@openvz.org> wrote:

> >>>>Yes, it is effective, and the reclamation is O(1) too. It has couple of > >>>>problems by design, (1) doesn't handle shared pages and (2) doesn't > >>>>provide support for both min_shares and max_shares.
> >>>
> >>>Right. I wanted to show proof-of-cencept of the pzone based controller > >>>and implemented minimal features necessary as the memory controller.
> >>>So, the pzone based controller still needs development and some cleanup.
> >>
> >>Just out of curiosity, how it was measured that it is effective?
> >
> > I don't have any benchmark numbers yet, so I can't explain the > > effectiveness with numbers. I've been looking for the way to > > measure the cost of pzones correctly, but I've not found it out yet.
> >
> >>How does it work when there is a global memory shortage in the system?
> >
> > I guess you are referring to the situation that global memory is running > > out but there are free pages in pzones. These free pages in pzones are > > handled as reserved for pzone users and not used even in global memory > > shortage.
> ok. Let me explain what I mean.
> Imagine the situation with global memory shortage. In kernel, there are > threads which do some job behalf the user, e.g. kjournald, loop etc. If > the user has some pzone memory, but these threads fail to do their job > some nasty things can happen (ext3 problems, deadlocks, OOM etc.)
> If such behaviour is ok for you, then great. But did you consider it?
>
> Also, I can't understand how it works with OOM killer. If pzones has > enough memory, but there is a global shortage, who will be killed?

I understand.

IMHO, only the system processes should use global memory.
User processes that may cause such memory shortage should be enclosed in pzones first.

Thanks,

--
KUROSAWA, Takahiro
