Hello,

Debian has planned the release of lenny in September [1], with it's freeze comming in mid July. Will the openvz patch for 2.6.24 be considered stable by then? Or is it still highly experimental? What are you planning to do with lenny?

If not stable by then, all debian openvz users would be forced to either stick with etch, or use an older version of the kernel with lenny. The problem with the second is that there won't be any official security support, so I'd like to avoid going that way.

Is online migration from a 2.6.18 HN to a 2.6.24 HN supported/possible?

Thanks,

Alexander
