You cannot use LXC for hosting. It is not secure for that purpose. Only for internal use behind a firewall where the ability to break out of individual containers is not a security problem. So for corporate use where you need to keep the logic separate and the only people accessing things are administrators.

I repeat. You cannot use LXC for hosting.

The primary use of OVZ is for hosting. So LXC is not a replacement for OVZ. LXD is but it's still not as secure or stable
