I'm afraid not. You can work around it by running other updates by excluding the initscripts package like yum update --exclude=initscripts but that doesn't solve the conflict.

I think the next step, that I haven't had time to try yet, would be installing a fresh container, then manually updating to the package in the alma devel repo. Then reboot the container to see if there's any networking issues. If all is well, then that's probably a good solution.
