I think your SSH issue is hardly connected with iptables module bug. Check /var/log/messages for SSHD's errors. Probably a bad config file.

Hello,

could you please post the exact kernel version you are using?

Concerning the ipt_owner module: this module is not virtualized, so you cannot use it inside a VE at the moment.

sshd: it's hard to say with no node access, but if you were configuring sshd before it happened, then most probably this is a misconfiguration, so try to put the old config back, this might help.

finist wrote on Wed, 25 July 2007 13:09Hello,

could you please post the exact kernel version you are using?

Concerning the ipt_owner module: this module is not virtualized, so you cannot use it inside a VE at the moment.

sshd: it's hard to say with no node access, but if you were configuring sshd before it happened, then most probably this is a misconfiguration, so try to put the old config back, this might help.
Kernel version 2.6.9-023stab040.
1-smp

Your log shows that SSHD is running. The output in the log is a bruteforce attack, its quite usual. If there are no other errors, i would say you machine is fine. try creating a cpanel user with shell access enable and log in to SSH with his credentials.
