To fix this problem You should:

- start to investigate causes of the problem,
- bang Your head against a brick wall,
- then think about possible work arounds,
- and finally found some nice solution.

Or provide some more details about the problem and allow us to help You in the investigations.

without details I can advise you to re-check VE's ONBOOT setting and trace vz scripts that should handle this settings.

thank You,
Vasily Averin

Oops, he knows russian too

But because of here is English forum let's continue to use broken English.

host system OS, kernel version, vzctl version, VE config, /var/log/vzctl.log are required.

Also it would be great to get trace of the vz service script in the part where it handles VE's ONBOOT parameter (by inserting "set -vx" command to the proper places).

Also you can give me access permission to Your node via PM -- I'll look at Your node.

thank You,
