When creating a guest/vps/container vzquota uses too much time on my system. About 30 seconds to turn it off. Is that normal? When I comment out the disk quota stuff from the config file, it will just take about 3-4 seconds to create a container.
Subject: Re: vzquota uses too much(?) time
Posted by Andrew Vagin on Tue, 30 Oct 2012 09:44:17 GMT

On Mon, Oct 29, 2012 at 05:07:01PM +0400, Christer Solskogen wrote:
> When creating a guest/vps/container vzquota uses too much time on my > system. About 30 seconds to turn it off(?) - Is that normal?
> When I comment out the disk quota stuff from the config file, it will > just take about 3-4 seconds to create a container.
>
> I think vzquota are syncing data to disk during this time. In this case it's normal.

You could test this thing, if you calls sync several times during creating.

Thanks.

> 2012-10-29T14:06:26+0100 vzctl : CT 101 : Running: /usr/sbin/vzquota off 101
Subject: Re: vzquota uses too much(?) time
Posted by Christer Solskogen on Tue, 30 Oct 2012 18:56:38 GMT

On 30/10/12 10:44 AM, Andrew Vagin wrote:

> I think vzquata are syncing data to disk during this time. In this case
> it's normal.
>
> You could test this thing, if you calls sync several times during creating.
>

I can? How?

--
chs