Subject: Re: Exim 4 crashes kernel on Debian Etch 64bit
Posted by jarcher on Mon, 02 Jul 2007 14:19:10 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Hi Vasily and thanks very much.

I didn't realize there was a kernel package on systs.org, I have been manually downloading the packages and installing them with dpkg. Which package do I want? I see on your site that there is a note dated June 18th announcing an update of 028stab035, which is 2.6.18. Is that it?

--On Monday, July 02, 2007 5:46 PM +0400 Vasily Tarasov <vtaras@openvz.org> wrote:

> This is a known issue and it is fixed already in fresh kernels. However > there are no fresh OpenVZ prebuild kernels in Debian archive at the > moment (Thorsten and Ola are working on it now), but you can use the > package from debian.systs.org.
>
> HTH, > Vasily.
>
> On Fri, 2007-06-29 at 18:31 -0400, Jim Archer wrote: >> Hi All...
>>
>> I'm running OpenVZ on a Debian Etch 64bit machine, with this prebuilt >> kernel:
>>
>> actual:~# uname -a >> Linux actual.xxxxxxxx.com 2.6.18-openvz-12-1etch1-amd64 #1 SMP Fri May 4
>> 23:37:24 MSD 2007 x86_64 GNU/Linux
>>
>>
>> One of the VPSs is dedicated as a mail server, which is running Exim4, >> Spamd, clamd, freshclam and sshd. Every few weeks, for no apparent >> reason, the VPS exceeds its kmemsize and Exim will behave strangely.
>> What's disturbing, though, is that restarting the VPS does not solve >> the problem and, in fact, often causes the entire machine to be >> unstable. The only way out of this is a reboot.
>>
>> I wish I had more information to offer, but I'm not sure what to look >> for. Can anyone assist? I'm happy to run some tests if it will help.
>>
>> Thanks very much.
>>
>>