One thing I did was deploy the template in a VZ system, then rsync the data from inside the VE elsewhere, which will copy the actual files and not dork around with the magic links at all. The magic links are great for disk and memory savings, which is one of the main advantages of virtuozzo over vz, but it adds some complexity and issues during transfers and restores in my opinion. After you rsync the complete filesystem elsewhere, you can just tar it up and use it as an openvz OS template.
