Just remove the packages for your distribution, for example in a debian base system just do:

root@windu:~# dpkg -l |grep vz ii kernel-patch-openvz   028.18.1+etch6   server virtualization solution - kernel patc ii linux-image-2.6.18+openvz custom01   Linux kernel binary image for version 2.6.18
ii vzctl   3.0.11-13   server virtualization solution - control too ii vzquota   3.0.8-2   server virtualization solution - quota tools root@windu:~#

Then just remove the openvz packages. Use the package manager of your own distribution (rpm, emerge, yum, apt ...)

You really haven't given any information. I'm assume you want to remove OpenVZ from a host node? Or are you wanting to destroy an OpenVZ container?

If the former, it depends on what distro you are using on your host node and how you installed it in the first place. You'd usually just reverse the process. Say for a Fedora or CentOS/RHEL based host node you'd...

revert to your previous /etc/sysctl.conf reboot to a non-openvz kernel remove all of the openvz packages you installed

On other systems it may vary... but basically you reverse the install process.

Worst case scenario... you reformat the whole box... but that is only for the extremely lazy.
